HINKHITTEN DEVEN

While the Danger Is Great There Are Always Officials Willing to Take the Risk-Exciting Capture of Geo. Davis, One of the Most Noted Outlaws in That Section.

A. A. Anderson, until recently an assistant, doorkeeper of the House of Representatives, has left Washington to engage in muchiunting down in the "mounshining" district of West Tennessee. On and off, he has been engaged in that business for more than seven years—the limit of life given to the United States marshal in the Southern mountains.

outhern mountains.
"I suppose?" he said to a Times re porter before he left, "that I will stay in it until my time comes. There is a fascination about it, as there is about bear-hunting or fox-chasing. You firmly resolve to give it up, but the momenta call comes your reso-lutions are forgetten and you join in the

"During last summer and fall I participated in several raids, the most notable of which led to the capture of George Davis, who was to his fellow moonshiners what Robin Hood was to other outlaws Davis is known all through Western Ten-nessee. For fed years be had been distilling Blick whisky, and we could never put our

"The country where his stills were lo cated is of the wildest character; pre-cipitous hills and great canyons alternate cipitous fulls and great canyons afternate and notic but a skilled mountaineer can pick his way. Red Sulphur Springs was the nearest point to it, and a creek, not far distant, has been known as Davis' 'deadline.' He publicly announced that any revenue officer or deputy marshal who cressed it would pay forfeit with his life and without precise information as to his whereabouts none would dare make the at-

"Davis, strange to say, is a church mem ber, and belongs to several secret orders. He was a prominent map in the community and well known through several counties. 'Five years ago last June United States Marshai J. M. Brown determined to cap-ture bavis. He took six or eight deputies with him, and they crossed the dead line.' Not far from Davis' house they found a dry still. They advanced toward the house, and seeing two men outside, called to them to come forward.

OFFICERS BEATEN BACK.

"The men disappeared in the house, and the next moment a perfect fasiliade of bullets was poured out on the marshal's party. Deputy Marshal Bronson Garner was killed and Marshal Brown shot through the chin. The officers were forced to retreat, leaving Garner's body on the ground. Neither the coroner's jury nor the grand jury could be prevailed upon to bring charges against Davis, some of them being animated by fear and others by friendship.
"Associated with Davis was Gui

Thomas, almost as famous a character. For years they had been working together and after the killing of Garner we almost despaired of capturing them.
"Winter before last a drummer put u at Red Sulphur Springs and went to country dance. He met Gus Thomas there, and the latter asked him to have a drink. The drummer declined, saying he did not care for ht. Thomas then introduced him to a young lady and told him he must dance with her. The drummer did not care to dance, and said so. He never spoke again Thomas whipped out his revolver and sho

CAPTURE OF DAVIS.

"On September 23 we received a letter from Thomas, stating that on September 25 Davis would be ut his still 'doubling up.' 'Meet me by the bridge, over the dead line,' he added, 'at midnight, and I will take you to the still."

"At the appointed time six of us were there, General Raider Ferguson and Deputy Collector Rutledge being among the num-ber. Thomas soon arrived. He made a figure that would attract attention any where. His skin is as fuir as a blonde of purest type, and his eyes are as black as coals and fierce as a lien's. He was nicely and even elegantly dressed in moun style, carried his Winchester in his hands, and had two pistols in his belt.

"Puring the whole time he guided us he never removed his eyes from us, nor his finger from the trigger of his gun. After much rough traveling we reached a ravine where Thomas left us, saying that in the canyon beyond we would find Davis and his

"We cautiously pushed on until we had located the still. Then, dividing our party, three took one side and three the other. Davis and another man, whom we after ward ascertained was Bob Thomas, Gus Thomas' brother, were there. They sus pected nothing and did not know we were within miles of them until they were looking down the barrels of our Win-

" 'Weil, boys,' Davis remarked, after throwing up his hands, 'you have me at last. I came here once too often.'

"The still had a capacity of ninety barrels. We broke up the still, spilled out the liquor, and then started with our prisoners back over the mountains. We reached town safely, and Davis and Bob Thomas ere now serving long terms of imprisonment. Gus Thomas continues to distill whisky at the old stamping grounds, and Lidoubt very much if he will ever be
